Notes for Julius Rothstein:
According to Kaethe Beutler:

My grandfather (Julius Rothstein) was born in a small town near the Polish border. Like many other towns in Poland as well as in the Polish part of Germany, this town was inhabited in the larger part by Jews. Like most of these Jewish families, the Rothsteins had quite a few children, probably seven or eight. My grandfather left the home of his parents right after his Bar Mitzwah and went to Berlin. He started out by sweeping out the shop of a tobacco dealer, and ended up as a stock broker. He was the son who made good, and as such he financed the marriages of his sisters and of many of his nieces, he found jobs for brothers and nephews, and had to help out whenever someone of the family got into difficulty.

Notes for Frumet Frank:
According to Kthe Beutler:

My grandmother (Fanny Frank) came from a better educated family. She was born in a small town south of Berlin, but grew up in Berlin. Her education was not more than the regular girls school, but she was very well read. Her father died rather young, and her mother rented out rooms in order to make a living. One of roomers was Julius Rothstein (RN82).
