Notes for Pieter Claesen Wyckoff:

The following is from the Introduction, The Wyckoff Family in America, 3rd Edition, Gateway Press, 1980: Pieter Claesen, founder of the Wyckoff Family in America, came to Fort Orange, Province of New Netherland, Apr 7, 1637, on the ship Rensselaerswick. In the log of that ship is the following:

"This ship sailed from Amsterdam, Holland, 25 Sept. 1636, anchored off the seaport, The Texel, 8 Oct. 1636, reached New Amsterdam, New Netherland, 4 Mar 1637, and Tuesday, 7 Apr 1637, about three o'clock in the morning we came to anchor before foort aeranien, the end of our journey upward."

The Rensselaerswick was outfitted by Killian van Rensselaer, a diamond merchant of Amsterdam, who had a speculative contract with the West India Company for the grant of a large body of land near the headwaters of the Hudson River, under which he was required to transport men and animals to the new country. There is no complete list of the passengers on this ship, but among those named are Pieter Cornelissen from Monnickendam, North Holland; Pieter Claesen van Norden, and Simon Walischez. These three did not remain in New Amsterdam, but went on to Fort Orange. Here Pieter Cornelissen became prominent in the affairs of the colony. He may have been an uncle of Pieter Claesen, although the two are not mentioned together in the records of the Van Rensselaer estate.

Records show that Pieter Claesen was one of the thirty-eight laborers sent on the Rensselaerswick to be assigned to various farmers on the Rensselaer estate, and that under the date 3 Apr 1637, he was assigned to Simon Walischez. According to a scorched fragment of the records of the estate, saved from a fire in the State Library at Albany in 1911, he was to receive 50 guilders per year for the first three years and 75 guilders per year for the last three years. About the time when the contract matured, Simon Walischez' lease was cancelled on the ground that he was an unsatisfactory tenant and the final settlement was made by the van Rensselaer Estate. (See also Hoppin, Washington Ancestry and Forty Other Families, Vol. III, Page 103.) According to the report, Pieter Claesen was 18 years old when he made his settlement with the van Rensselaer estate. Soon after this he rented a farm for himself and married Grietje van Ness, the daughter of a prominent citizen of the colony. Their two eldest children were born in Rensselaerswick, but the church in which were kept the records of their birth and the marriage of their parents, was burned and the records destroyed. With his wife and two children he went to New Amsterdam in 1649. Here he remained until 1655, when he signed a contract "to superintend the Bowery and cattle of Peter Stuyvesant in New Amersfoort" and moved into the house on Canarsie Lane in Flatlands, Brooklyn, now known as the Wyckoff Homestead.

Pieter Claesen prospered and became one of the most influential citizens of the little frontier settlement. He had bought land in that section in 1652 and continued to buy land from time to time, but he never owned the house in which he lived. He became a local judge, something like our own justice of the peace, and was influential in establishing the Flatlands Dutch Reformed Church at the juncture of Flatbush Avenue and King's Highway. His remains are said to have been buried in land now covered by the altar of this church. The Wyckoff Association in America, on May 22, 1938, planted a tree in the churchyard of this edifice in memory of Pieter Claesen and his descendants. On May 26, 1940 the same Association unveiled a bronze tablet inside the church, suitably inscribed in honor of Pieter Claesen.

When the British took over the Dutch colony, they had difficulty with the Dutch names and demanded that the Dutch families take surnames by which could be identified. It was then the the name Wyckoff first came into use. In a roll of those who took the oath of allegiance in King's County in 1687, the names of Pieter Claesen and his six sons appear with the surname Wyckoff. The origin of the name is as follows: Pieter Claesen had been a local judge and the name came from this fact, the "Wyk" meaning a parish and "hof" meaning a court. Thus the name would mean Pieter Claesen of the town court. A member of the Wyckoff family, wandering through a Dutch town during WWII, was surprised to see the name Wyckoff on a place of business, which suggests that the name may have been taken because of some old world association. Dr. Max Wickhoff of Vienna, Austria, in a letter dated 20 Dec 1929, writes that his family came from Friesland in the seventeenth century and that he believes that the Austrian Wickhoffs and the American Wyckoffs derive from the same Friesian gentry, living in the Austrian Netherlands, which then comprised a large part of Holland, Belgium, and East Friesland. He also refers to the house in the province of Drente which is called Hof in der Wijk, or Wijkof. "Hof" would here mean house or farmstead and "Wijk" would designate the locality. (See also: Hoppin, Washington Ancestry and Forty Other Families, Vol. III, page 122.) There can be no certainty as to which explanation is correct.

There are many spellings of the name, but the original spelling is Wijckoff, and the nearest approach to that is Wyckoff. The others are corruptions that have arisen from carelessness or illegible writing.

Pieter Claesen and his wife, Grietje van Ness, had eleven children, six boys and five girls, all of whom married and had families. The Wyckoff family had a high standing in the Dutch colony, as is shown by the families into which they married. All were families of importance.

Grietje vanNess, the mother of this great family, should also have consideration. She contributed much to the family she helped found. Even among the Dutch of that time there were distinctions of station, and she ranked high. Many of the plain people carried no family name. With them there was the coupling of the name of father and child, like Pieter Claesen, meaning Pieter, son of Claes. Others of apparently higher social or property advantages carried a family name from one generation to another. Grietje van Ness was of this latter class. She was the daughter of Cornelis Hendrick van Ness and Maycke Hendrick Adriense van der Burchgraeff.

Cornelius was the son of Hendrick Gerritse van Ness of Ameland, Holland. Maycke was the daughter of Hendrick Adreincse van der Burchgraeff and Annetje Janse of Laeckervelt, Holland. These surnames indicate that these families were of high rank and some wealth. The will of Annetje Jans, widow of Hendrick Adriens, dwelling at Laechkervelt, divides her estate between her son and her daughter Maycke, and provides that Maycke shall have the use of this estate during her lifetime, and that it shall then be devidedamong the six children of said Maycke, whom she names as follows:

Gerritie Cornelius, wife of Roeloff Cornelissen
Hendricke Cornelis, wife of Jan Jensen van Oothout
Hendrick
Gerrit
Jan

Grietje Cornelius, wife of Pieter Claesen of Amersfoort, Long Island.
Maycke died before her husband, but he carried out her wishes. Thus Grietje van Ness, when she married Pieter Claesen, brought to him wealth as well as rank.

Cornelius van Ness, son of Hendrick van Ness, doubtless was a native of the village of Nes on the Island of Ameland in the province of Friesland, North Holland. He later lived in Veanin, near Ulrecht in South Holland, which was the home of Killian van Rensselaer, patron of the colony of Rensselaerswick on the upper Hudson River. To this colony came Cornelius van Ness and his wife Maycke Hendricke van der Burchgraeff in August 1641. He was a man of education and ability and was influential in the affairs of the colony. He owned a farm near Greenbush, but he was no farmer. His main income was derived from his brewery and from his mercantile and political activities. He and his son-in-law Pieter Claesen engaged in a prolonged controversy with van Slichtenhorst, the autocratic director of the colony, which ended only when Pieter Claesen left the colony in June 1649 and van Slichtenhorst was arrested, on 18 Apr 1652, by order of Pieter Stuyvesant, Director General of the Colony. (See Hoppin, Washington Ancestry, Vol III, and AJF van Laer.)

Grietje outlived her husband, who died in 1694. She died between 1699 and 1703, and was buried beside her husband in Flatlands, Long Island.
