Notes for PATRICK BRESLIN:

From: "History and legends of the Civil Parish of Kilcummin" By Sean Lavin, NT, published 1988.....Page 68:

Pat Breslin lived across the road from the Cashel Court Cairn on Castlenageeha road in the old village of Cashel. He was a captain of the North Mayo Brigade. He was supposed to have roughly thirty men and twenty women under his command. He was first interested in the 1916 men and became involved later. He spent some time in Fionnar Camp near Ballyshannon and Ach na Brocai in Kenagh near Nephin Beg. He was probably there on training exercises. He had an I.R.A. uniform, three pistols and three rifles. All these were hidden around the townland after the treaty. Women in Cumann na mBan were three of Pat's sisters, Maud Munnelly, Marion Munnelly, Morans, Rogers from Foghill and some McLoughlins from Rathlacken. Men involved in the volunteers were Anthony Farrell, Carley Munnelly, Mickey Lynn, John O'Malley, Martin Killeen, Patsy Killeen, Thomas Newcombe and John Newcombe. Many of these were on the run (1919- 1921). Pat was arrested in 1922 by the Free State Army. He spent nine months in Mountjoy Jail. this arrest was made by our own government after the (1921-1922) Treaty. He was not active anymore as we had independence. He died in 1983 at the age of ninety two. He is buried in Rathfran Cemetery. He was not active in the civil war. The house he lived in is now demolished but his son lives near the site.

My mother Helen (Breslin) Fayne always spoke of her brother Pat as having been taken from the family by the Cunningham's,

To Mrs John Diskin yesterday came that experience dreaded by many American mothers with sons fighting in Korea.

She stood weeping in Calvary Cemetery before the Flag-covered casket of her soldier-son.

His name was William J. Diskin. He was 20 years old, a private with the 130th Infantry Regiment, when a blast of artillery fire killed him at Koan, Korea, last September.

Mrs. Diskin carried herself bravely through the Solom Requiem Mass at Sacred Heart Church. Bishop Timothy Manning presided at the church rites and a choir of young Diskin's former Cathedral High School classmates sang the requiem.

At the graveside, she stood stoically between her husband and sons, Air Force Private Frank Diskin and John Diskin Jr.

But then came the traditional salute from a squad of riflemen and the mourning of taps. The flag from her son's casket was neatly folded and given to her by Father William McHale of Sacred Heart.

Then to Mrs. Diskin came that overwhelming grief known to many mothers. She cried over the casket: "My son, my young son, come back!"

Notes for OWEN JOSEPH FAYNE:

Owen Fayne was born December 6, 1900 in a thatched cottage built by his grandfather in 1835. His home was in Clonmore, County Roscommon, Ireland. The ninth of twelve children, he was destined to become the patriarch of a proud family in America. After about nine years of formal schooling this tall handsome lad, lied about his age to take a job in a quarry, cutting stone and crushing rock. Chosen to represent his fellow workers in a labor dispute in 1919, Owen went before the railroad commission in Dublin to demand fair wages. After losing the appeal for fair treatment, the workers joined the International Transport Workers Union, which contracted for the workers to go on piece work. this effectively doubled the salaries for most of the men, but put the quarry, which supplied crushed rock for the railroads, out of business. Owen then went to work for the railroads loading sand ballast. he worked at that job until he was given the opportunity to migrate to America.

His older sister, Alice had left Ireland at the age of fifteen and worked as a maid. Her entire salary went toward bringing her sisters and brothers out of Ireland. All money earned in Ireland went to the land and the support of the large family. There was no opportunity in Ireland to marry or save money. The constant fight for freedom from the English occupation of the country put the young men at risk of arrest. During the uprising of 1921, Owen was put into prison until things cooled down, not for what he had done to oppose the British, they never caught him in the act, but to get a known agitator out of circulation.

Owen went to Dublin for a physical before leaving for America in 1926. The authorities were very careful because there was rampant tuberculosis in Ireland. The passengers in steerage were checked for lice every day. An American citizen who inadvertently was included in the group being checked, raised a fuss about the procedure, amusing and surprising the "greenhorns" who did not realize that you could complain about anything.

Never having lived in a city, Owen was shocked at the squalor of New York. His cousin Tom Monahan, who met him at the boat, and smoothed the immigration process, took him to Central Park that Sunday after mass. There, he found a little Ireland. Every county of Ireland had a stand of sorts where members gathered and exchanged news of "home". Over boot-leg whiskey, they talked politics or job opportunities. In the fields were football games and hurling games where County played against County.

Owen arrived in San Francisco May 1st, 1926. He remembered the date because it was "Straw hat day". All the men on Market Street looked very dapper. He settled in with his sister, Mary who ran a boarding house on Fair Oaks Street for single Irish immigrants. Other residents of the house were His brother Pat, Tim Monahan, Jack Hollywood, Jerry Maloney and Dinny Culloty. Within a few weeks a job was found for him at Southern Pacific Railroad, unloading box cars for 3.84 a day. He was laid off in December and then worked at the site of the Woman's City Club, dismantling the building. After assorted other laboring jobs, he finally was hired as a grave digger in Holy Cross Cemetery in Colma, for the grand salary of five dollars a day. After five years working, his salary was up to five dollars and seventy five cents. By that time Owen was married to Helen Breslin. He had met her at a dance. They were married in July, 1928 at Mission Dolores Church in San Francisco.

They lived on Valencia St, one month for 25.00, then to Richland Av. and rented for 35. month. for two years. Eventually they rented 284 Day Street in the Mission District of San Francisco. The rent was twenty eight dollars a month. He drove a 1928 Studabaker that cost him eighty dollars and paid for itself with carpooling to the cemetery.

Always a union man, Owen took a position as secretary of the Cemetery Workers Union, American Federation of Labor. He was frequently involved in Strikes and supporting action involving other unions or organizational efforts. At the time of the general strike that crippled San Francisco he was exempt as the dead had to be buried.

The only means of advancement for a man like Owen was through the Civil Service Examinations for city jobs. Much of his free time was spent studying and applying for exams for whatever jobs were available. Thousands would take the tests for a dozen openings in the police, fire or parks departments. Eventually Owen succeeded in passing the exam for the parks department and was hired as a gardener in the parks and recreation department.

As a civil service employee, his job was secure. By that time there were five children, house payments at 1833 Church Street, and a war coming on. Things were good in San Francisco. The world's fair was being set up on Treasure Island, the ship yards were gearing up and people were optimistic.

Owen did not feel it was necessary to register for the draft. He was forty one years old, with five children and he thought, exempt from military service. Not so, called before the draft board, he had the choice of go to war, go to jail, or go to work in the shipyards. He took one of the worst jobs in the ship yards, working for Henry J. Kaiser shipyards, wrapping asbestos on the pipes of the ships for the huge salary of ten dollars a day. Times were sad because of the many gold stars in the windows, and there were black-outs and scary news on the radio, but San Francisco was a wonderful exciting city. There was lots of overtime work and money was plentiful for the first time. The family moved from the Mission District to the Sunset District along with all the other "lace curtain Irish" who were doing well.

After the war, Owen returned to his old job in the playgrounds of San Francisco. He retired in 1964 and with Helen, moved to Millbrae in 1960. He enjoyed his home at 311 Santa Lucia in Millbrae and his twenty nine grandchildren as the patriarch of the family until his death in 1995 at the age of 94.
